Comments

DEATH EDGE has been on our projects list for a while now and we've been on it for close to a year due to various unfortunate events. So I am incredibly happy to finally release this chapter! I have bought the volumes available and we would be more than happy to continue this manga. But, to do so, we'll need a Japanese or Chinese translator and more cleaners and typesetters with experience/proficiency.

If you would like to apply as a translator for this, please be advised that this manga does not have a lot of furigana and is therefore harder to translate. There's also so much text; it makes you want to hurt someone... If you're still interested, please apply! (e-mail)

Please buy the manga!

We can't underline this often enough but in this case you really, really should.

Unlike other mangakas, Kan Shimotani does not sell thousands upon thousands of mangas. That's why she also works as an illustrator. Her art is, in my humble opinion, underrated and in order to make a living, she concentrates on her best-seller Brave-10. If you want to see more of K.M.'s work, please purchase her mangas, such as DEATH EDGE to show your support and enable her to work on those projects more as well!

Japanese 101

You might wonder why the bubble was written that way. Well, welcome to the joy that is Japanese! A word can be written in kanji (Chinese-origin symbols) and the Japanese hiragana or katakana. Often, the kanji-words have a "reading help" above them in hiragana or katakana, so-called furigana.

Sometimes in mangas, you'll find words written in kanji that have a furigana line that does not reflect the kanji. The furigana will not be a reading help then, but offer a 2nd word instead. That's what happened here.

Other times, the furigana line will simply give a "modern" word synonym alternative (like, the Japanese word will be in kanji, but a katakana furigana line will read the word in English), sometimes it will give reference help (like a line above 'she' that says "Carolette") or, as in this case, it will have a completely different word.
